COUTURE BRIDAL · LONDON 1991 · BROOKLYN

One gown. Made for one woman.

Designed from a blank page, cut to your measurements and finished by hand at Yemi Osunkoya's atelier.

*Every Kosibah gown begins
as a conversation. Yemi sketches in front of you, in real time, until the drawing is the dress.*

Your figure, your venue, the season, the hour of the ceremony, the traditions that matter to your family. All of it goes into the sketch before a single seam is cut.

THE ATELIER

Made by hand, for one woman.

Haute couture is slow on purpose. A Kosibah gown is drawn, cut, fitted and finished in the atelier, by the same hands, from the first sketch to the last stitch. This is how it happens.

1 The conversation

Your date, your venue, the hour of the ceremony, the traditions your family keeps. Yemi listens, and starts to draw while you talk.

2 The sketch

A trained fashion illustrator, Yemi draws the gown in front of you in real time and in full detail, so you can see the dress before it exists. You leave the first appointment with it.

3 Fabric and embellishment

Silk faille, tulle, French lace, hand-beaded appliqué. Every fabric is chosen against the sketch and against your skin, in the atelier's light.

4 The toile

Before any silk is cut, the gown is made once in calico to your measurements. The toile is where the silhouette is decided, pinned and re-pinned on you.

5 The fittings

A series of fittings in the atelier, or by arrangement where you are. Each one brings the gown closer to the body it was drawn for. The Kosibah hourglass is built here, in the corsetry.

6 Hand finishing

Appliqués are placed and sewn by hand along the seam lines. Beading, hems, linings and closures are finished the way they have been since 1991. Then the last fitting, and the gown is yours.

TIMING

Allow [LEAD TIME] before your wedding date for couture. Gowns from the Asheyori Eji ready-to-wear collection can be made to measure in less.

THE GOWNS

Couture, made to measure, and ready to wear.

Every gown here can be the starting point for yours. Couture is drawn from nothing. Asheylori Eji is the label's ready-to-wear answer, cut with the same hourglass fit.
